Scotland's International Poetry Festival

Warp and Weft: a tapestry of poetry

8-10 March 2024, St Andrews & Online

stanzapoetry.org

Welcome to StAnza 2024

In preparation for this edition of StAnza we recently visited Dovecot Studios with Fife Contemporary and poet Lisa Fannen. We were there to select a woven piece to showcase at our festival, something Lisa could respond to in sound and poetry.

Amongst the working weavers on the studio floor, a selection of spectacular pieces were rolled out for us: tapestries woven with shining metallic string; images of the sea; historical images deconstructed; and a thick rug with an arresting view of Grangemouth at night. It was this that Lisa gravitated toward. You will find it displayed – along with her audio piece – at the Laidlaw Music Centre.

What also captured my attention that day were the artists at their looms. I couldn't say what a single one of them was making, but I watched as various colours & textures were brought together. Eventurally, these strands would grow into patterns and shapes to form an image. It reminded me that we are here at StAnza to celebrate the myriad ways people and poems come together.

To me, a festival is many strands intricately entwined to create a larger, cohesive picture. And so, this year, with Warp and Weft, we will create our own tapestry of poetry. We will celebrate cross-disciplinary work, text & textile. We will sit with poetry, we will take it for a walk. We will hear poets speaking to the moment, to the many ways in which the world is beautiful and troubled. We will celebrate artists no longer with us but whose influence is stitched into our ways of thinking and writing. We will gather poetry from around the globe: in zines, on phone lines, in translation and in collaboration.

At Dovecot, watching the weavers work, I was keen to know what they were making. What would I be looking at when they rested their bobbins and I stood back to see what all those hands and strings had conjured? As an organiser, I know the exquisite quality of each thread we're bringing to St Andrews, but I do not know what we will all see when they join up. I only know that by Sunday night we're going to have something complex, intangible, and significant to consider. I look forward to stepping back with you, our audiences and community, and seeing what we made this festival.

I want to thank you all for joining us – whether in-person or online – and for opening yourselves up to the rich tapestry of poetry around us.

Welcome to StAnza: we hope you enjoy.

Exhibitions

Twilling Tweeds by Adil Iqbal

at Byre Theatre: Studio Foyer | 1-16 March

Featuring two hand embroidered works from the Dewar Art Award-winning project, this exhibition from Scottish-Pakistani cultural practitioner, Adil Iqbal uses collaborative practices to bridge Western and indigenous craft cultures between makers in Scotland and Pakistan, and is a celebration of the common threads that connect global traditions.

Part of our visual art and craft programme, produced in partnership with Fife Contemporary.

Grangemouth at Night Smoke and Lights: a poetic response to the work of Dovecot Studios by Lisa Fannen

at Laidlaw Music Centre Foyer | 1-16 March

Writer and performer Lisa Fannen presents a spoken word recording alongside artwork by Dovecot Studios, Scotland's world-famous tapestry studio. The chosen work is a gun-tufted piece which was created in 2019 by Dovecot with contemporary artist Kurt Jackson. Lisa Fannen brings her own interpretive reflections to illuminate this work afresh.

Part of our visual art and craft programme, produced in partnership with Fife Contemporary.

In Between by Anupa Gardner

at Byre Theatre: Café Bar | 1-16 March

Edinburgh-based printmaker, Anupa Gardner's handwoven, sculptural paai – a household mat common in South Indian homes – explores notions of identity and home, weaving together different prints to symbolise the shifting nature of the artist's relationship to both Scotland and India. Gardner's work invites us to reflect upon the threads of memory, connection and belonging that interweave to make us who we are.

Glasgow Zine Library

at Byre Theatre: Main Foyer | 9-10 March

Enjoy a specially curated selection of poetry zines and bring your zine-related questions to our friends from the Glasgow Zine Library in the main foyer of the Byre Theatre throughout the weekend.

All of our exhibitions run throughout March and are free to visit.
